Shades of Blue

Kotel, also known as the Western Wall or the Wailing Wall. It is a sacred site, the last remaining wall of the Second Temple.

This week, NTIA announced the BEAD funding allocations. (See the list here)

I'll be writing about that in future issues.

While NTIA was making its announcement, I was in Israel. Because many of you have been witness to my personal and professional journey, I am sharing a few photos from my trip.

The Mount of Olives and the Temple Mount.

Inside the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, a place of Christian pilgrimage since the 4th century.

The Church of the Holy Sepulchre contains the site where Jesus was crucified, and the tomb where he was buried and resurrected.

Nearly 40,000 Muslims, Christians, and Jews live in less than one square kilometer, on stone-paved streets and walls that date back thousands of years.

In Memory of My Wife

The reason for my trip was to visit the place my wife is buried, north of Tel Aviv near the Mediterranean.

After looking at sea and sky one day, I wrote this inscription on behalf of our boys, to remember her and look for her toward the horizon:

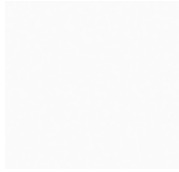

Dana was our Horizon.

Both the land beneath us, Our support and the sky above us, Our inspiration.

Where heaven and earth meet and are indistinguishable.
